

SINGLE CREDIT COURSE ON

GENDERED JUSTICE:

UNDERSTANDING THE COMPLEX IMPLICATIONS
OF GENDER SEXUALITY AND THE LAW

ORGANISED BY:

CENTRE FOR WOMEN AND LAW
NATIONAL LAW UNIVERSITY ODISHA

RESOURCE PERSON:

Professor L. Denice Labertew
Juris Doctor, Master of Human Rights

ABOUT THE COURSE

This course will provide an overview of the intersection between law and gender in the American context, with comparisons to international law as relevant. It will cover the theoretical concepts feminist and other gender justice scholars have used to understand the implications of gender on people's lives and explore how these theories help us to have a deeper understanding of the ways gender and the law work together to structure inequality into societal institutions. It will explore the impact of that inequality on individuals and groups of people in society with an emphasis on the role of organizing within oppressed gender groups to restructure law as it relates to gender to achieve equality. It will culminate with a look towards the future by re-imagining what an inclusive and gender equal system of laws might look like and how we might achieve it.

ABOUT THE RESOURCE PERSON

With more than 20 years of experience in women's leadership, grass roots organizing and non profit management, Professor L. Denice Labertew has focused her career on ethically leading and empowering organizational and community teams to achieve their goals of societal change. She has worked with communities from East Los Angeles to Chennai, India, from Washington, D.C. to Glasgow, Scotland and has studied and shared collectively the methods that impact communities around the world. With a focus on addressing gender inequity and violence against women, she remains an advocate for community change. She has been a college professor for more than a decade.
