MOOT PROPOSITION

Abhinav Sharma & Ors. v. Union of Velmoria & Ors.

WP _____ of 2025

1.The Republic of Velmoria is a sovereign, socialist, secular, and democratic republic with a parliamentary system of governance. The Constitution of Velmoria, adopted in 1950, guarantees fundamental rights under Part III, including the right to freedom of speech and expression (Article 19(1)(a)), right to access information (Article 21), and right to equality (Article 14).

2.In January 2024, the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) released a two-part investigative documentary titled "Velmoria: The Pranav Question", exploring alleged lapses in state accountability during the 2002 Mystara riots and examining the political trajectory of Prime Minister Pranav Deshmukh. The documentary includes interviews with riot survivors, political analysts, foreign diplomats, and features confidential documents purportedly leaked from governmental archives.

3.The release triggered heated debates domestically and internationally. While opposition parties and human rights organizations lauded it for "shedding light on historical injustices," the ruling party criticized it as a "selective and politically motivated portrayal aimed at undermining national integrity." The Prime Minister's Office (PMO) issued a statement denying the allegations and questioning the documentary's journalistic ethics and reliance on unverifiable sources.

4. Following the documentary's release, certain social media influencers and activist groups used the footage to criticize the government, some even calling for international sanctions against Velmoria. This led to sporadic protests in several cities. Notably, in Jalpur and Mananpura, demonstrations turned violent, resulting in property damage and communal tensions.

5. On January 22, 2024, the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting (MIB), invoking Section 69A of the Information Technology Act, 2000, issued emergency blocking orders to digital platforms, including Twitter, YouTube, and Netflix. The government cited the following reasons:

- a) Threat to national security and public order.
- b) Potential to incite communal disharmony, especially given the upcoming general elections
- c) Possible diplomatic fallout affecting bilateral trade negotiations with the UK
- d) Alleged violation of Velmoria's defamation and sedition laws

6. The blocking orders were issued without prior notice to the documentary producers or platforms. Though the MIB claimed that the Review Committee approved the decision post-facto, RTI applications filed by civil society groups revealed discrepancies in the approval timeline.

7. Several student bodies and activist groups attempted to organize public screenings on university campuses. In response, state governments in Mystara, and Viradesh issued prohibitory orders under Section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973. Students and organizers in some states were detained under preventive detention laws, raising questions about arbitrary use of executive power.

8. Abhinav Sharma, a final-year law student at the Aryavarta National Law University (ANLU), sought to screen the documentary as part of a campus debate on press freedom. The university denied permission, citing "unavoidable law and order concerns" after receiving an advisory from the local police. When Sharma and others attempted a peaceful protest, they were detained, and their devices were confiscated. Sharma claims his private messages and emails were accessed without consent.

9. Separately, a leaked internal memo from the Ministry of External Affairs suggested concerns that the documentary's circulation could jeopardize Velmorla's bid for a permanent seat at the United Nations Security Council (UNSC), adding to the diplomatic stakes.

10. Allegations surfaced that certain social media platforms shared user data with government agencies without appropriate legal safeguards. Digital rights organizations argue this violates the right to privacy under Article 21, especially post the Puttaswamy judgment.

11. In parliament, the opposition tabled a motion criticizing the "draconian censorship" and demanded an independent judicial inquiry. Conversely, members of the ruling coalition defended the action, highlighting the duty of the state to prevent misinformation during sensitive periods.

12. Public opinion remains sharply divided. Some civil society groups filed affidavits supporting the petitioners, while others emphasized the need for responsible journalism and national stability. International media watchdogs issued statements condemning the ban, while certain foreign governments refrained from comment, citing non-interference.

13. The Press Council of Velmoria issued an advisory noting concerns about journalistic ethics in the documentary's production, particularly the use of undisclosed sources and edited footage. The petitioners argue that this does not justify censorship of content already in public discourse.

14. Importantly, financial records revealed that certain activist groups supporting the screenings received foreign funding, raising questions about compliance with the Foreign Contribution (Regulation) Act, 2010 (FCRA). This has become a parallel controversy in the public arena.

15. Now, Mr. Sharma and a group of activists then filed a Writ Petition under Article 32, challenging the constitutional validity of the ban on the documentary.

Legal Issues for Consideration:

1. Whether the preventive detentions, alleged data privacy breaches, and restrictions on public screenings infringe upon the right to privacy and personal liberty under Article 21, or whether these measures are justifiable under constitutional provisions safeguarding national security and public order.

2. Whether the blocking orders issued under Section 69A of the Information Technology Act, 2000, constitute a reasonable restriction under Article 19(2) of the Constitution or amounting to an unconstitutional infringement of freedom of speech and expression under Article 19(1)(a).

3. Whether the procedural safeguards under Section 69A and the Information Technology (Intermediary Guidelines and Digital Media Ethics Code) Rules, 2021, were duly followed, or whether the actions of the Union of Velmoria amount to arbitrary and disproportionate state action violating Article 14.

All laws of Velmoria are in Pari materia to India.
